Chapter XVII: Yitro (Ex. 18:1-20:23)

Essay 7. Strict justice or compromise

In this parshah, Jethro recognizes that Moses is adjudicating disputes all day long, and counsels him to delegate these judgments to others.

שַׁבָּת פֶּרֶק קַמָּא רָב אַמֵּי וְרָב אַסִּי הָוּי יָתְבִי וְגָרְסִי בֵּינֵי עַמּוּדַי. וְכֹל שׁעָתָּא וְשׁעָתָּא הָווּ טָפְחִי אַעֵיבְרָא דְּדַשָּׁא וְאָמְרִי: אִי אִיכָּא דְאִית לֵיה דִינָא, לֵיעוּל וְלֵיתֵי ע"כ. הַמַּאַמֶר צָרִיךְ בֵּיאוּר, אַמֵּאי הָווֵי יָתְבִי בֵּינֵי עַמּוּדֵי, וְאַמֵּאי כָּל "שׁעְתָּא" דַּוְקָא "הַווּ טַפְחִי" וְכוּ', וְאַמֵּאי "אִי אִיכָּא דְאִית לֵיה דִינָא" וְכוּ'.

Tractate Shabbat, first chapter (10a): "Rav Ami and Rav Asi would sit and study between the pillars [beneath the study hall], and each and every hour they would knock on the bolt of the door and say: If there is [someone] who [has a case that] requires judgment, let him enter and come [before us]." This sentence requires clarification.

Question 1: Why were they sitting between the pillars?

Question 2: Also, why "each and every hour"?

Question 3: Also, why "if there is [someone] who [has a case that] requires judgment"?

וְאִיתָא בְּפֶּרֶק קַמָּא דְסַנְהָדְרִין וּפָסַק גַּם כֵּן בְּשֵׁלְחָן עָרוּהְ חוֹשֶׁן מִשְׁפָּט (סִימָן ג') דְשְׁנַיִם שֶׁדַּנּוּ אֵין דִינֵיהֶם דִין אֶלָּא אָם כֵּן קַבְּלוּם עֲלִיהֶם בַּעֲלִי דִינִין. וְהַנֵּה רֵב אַמֵּי וְרֵב אַסִי הָוּוּ מִקְרוּ דַּיָּינֵי דְאַרְעָא דְיַשְׁרָאֵל כִּדְמוּכָח בָּסוֹף פֶּרֶק קַמָּא דְסַנְהָדְרין, וּמִשׁוּם הָכִי הָיוּ דָּנִים יְחִידִים בְּלֹא אִיצְטְרוֹפֵי שְׁלִישִׁי בַּהַדִיִיהוּ, דְדִילְמָא לֹא הָוּוּ מִשְׁכָּחִי דְדָמֵי לְהוּ, וְהָוּ מְדַקְדְּקֵי כִּנְקוּ וּמִשׁוּם הָכִי הָיוּ דָּנִים יְחִידִים בְּלֹא אִיצְטְרוֹפֵי שְׁלִישִׁי בַּהַדִיִיהוּ, דְדִילְמָא לֹא הָווּ מִשְׁכְּחִי דְדָמֵי לְהוּ, וְהָווּ מְדַקְדְקֵי כִּנְקוּי הַנָּת שְׁבִּירוּשָׁנִים, שֶׁלָּא הָיוּ יוֹשְׁבִים וְכוּי אָלָא אָם כֵּן יוֹדְעִים מִי יָשֶׁב עִמָּהֶם. וּכְדִילְמָא לָי וִיבָרְרוּשָׁלִיִם, שֶׁלָּא הָיוּ יוֹשְׁבִים וְכוּי שֶׁלָּישִי בַּהַדִיָיהוּ

It is brought in the first chapter of tractate Sanhedrin (6a) and also the Shulchan Aruch, Choshen Mishpat rules (siman 3, se'if 2) that regarding two who judge, instead of the customary three, their judgment is not a valid judgment, unless the litigants had accepted to abide by them. Here, Rabbi Ami and Rav Asi were called judges of the Land of Israel, as proven at the end of the first chapter of tractate Sanhedrin (17b). Because of this, they judged independently, without the participation of a third between them, for perhaps they couldn't find someone similar to them in the breadth of their knowledge. For they judged like the scrupulous people of Jerusalem, who wouldn't sit in judgment unless they knew who was sitting with them.¹ In order for their judgments to be upheld, the litigants need to come and accept them as the judges, for they are not able to judge them against their will, because they are only two judges instead of three.

וּלְפִי זֶה הָיּוּ אוֹמְרִים אִי אִיכָּא דְאִית לֵיה דִּינָא, לֵיעוּל וְלֵיתֵי, אִי אִיכָּא מָאן דְּבָעֵי לְמִיבְרַר לָן לְדַיָּינֵי לֵיעוּל וְלֵיתֵי. וְהֵוּוּ יָתְבִי בִּינֵי עַמּוּדֵי לוֹמַר כִּי הֵם עַמּוּדֵי הָהוֹרָאָה עַמּוּדֵי הָעוֹלָם, עַל שְׁלֹשָׁה דְּבָרִים הָעוֹלָם עוֹמֵד עַל הַדִּין וְכוּ', אוֹ עַל הָאֶמֶת דְּהַיִינוּ כְּשׁרֶה, דְּפְשָׁרָה בִּשְׁנַים. וְזֶהוּ בֵּינֵי עַמּוּדֵי, תְּרֵי עַמּוּדֵי דִין וּפְשָׁרָה, וְהָווּ טָפְחִי כֹּל שֵׁעְתָּא וְשׁעְתָּא כְּדְבָסָמוּךָ עַל כֹל דַיָּין שֶׁדָּן דְּיוּ זְיָמִית, דְּפְשָׁרָה בִּשְׁנַים. וְזֶהוּ בֵינֵי עַמּוּדֵי, תְּרֵי עַמּוּדֵי דִין וּפְשָׁרָה, וְהָווּ טָפְחִי כֹּל שֵׁעְתָּא וְשׁעְתָּא כְּדְבָסָמוּךָ עַל כֹל דַיָּין שֶׁדָּן דִין אֶמֶת לַאָמִיתוֹ, אָפִילוּ שָׁעָה אַחַת וְכוּי.

Answer 3: According to this, they would say, "If there is [someone] who [has a case that] requires judgment," meaning, if there is someone who wants to accept us as judges, let him enter and come before us.

Answer 1: They would sit between the pillars as if to say that they were pillars of decision-making, i.e., justice, and thus pillars of the world. "As Rabban Shimon ben Gamaliel used to say: on three things does the world stand: on justice, on truth, and on peace."² Or alternatively, they were "pillars of truth," this is compromise, for compromise may be decided by two judges.³ That is, a Beit Din can rule on the basis of justice [din] [77], a strict application of the halacha, finding 100% for one party or the other, or a Beit Din can rule on the basis of compromise [peshara] [77]. They were indicating to the litigants that they could choose whether they wanted a ruling based upon strict justice, or upon compromise ("truth"). [The Gemara and the Shulchan Aruch strongly advocate that a Beit Din pursue compromise between the parties, rather than strict justice.] This is the meaning of "between the pillars," the two pillars of judgment and compromise.

Answer 2: They would knock each and every hour, as in the adjoining section to our Gemara, it says that every judge who judges a true judgment faithfully, even if he sits in judgment only one hour, it is as though he became a partner to the Holy One, Blessed be He.⁴ Thus, by knocking each and every hour, Rav Ami and Rav Asi were letting potential litigants know that they were willing to serve as judges who could offer a true judgment, whether it be a strict justice, or truth (compromise).
